

It's About How You LIVE!

2010 National Book Tour, featuring David J. Casarett, MD

David Casarett, MD author of Last Acts: Discovering Possibility and Opportunity at the End of Life (Simon & Schuster, January 2010), will speaking at Pathways Hospice as part of a 30 state tour across the United States.

What would you do if you had an hour to live? A day? A week? How would you use your time? And are there some ways of using that time that are better--more useful, more important, more meaningful--than others? Dr. Casarett explores these and other questions in this presentation, which is based on his book.

Drawing on his own experience as a palliative care physician and researcher, as well as on examples from history and current events, Casarett describes a variety of ways in which people choose to use their time when that time is limited. Leaving a legacy, strengthening relationships with family, celebrations, revenge and altruism are just a few of the "last acts" that his patients and many other people have chosen. Using stories and images, Casarett weaves together a tapestry that describes the possibilities that exist at the end of life, and he offers suggestions for ways in which we can help others to choose the last acts that are right for them.

Copies of Last Acts will be available for $20 each.
